

User 1 Empathy Research Interview

- When you have a flare-up, how do you try to "trace back" what caused it?

I look back at my week to see when I maybe had more appointments than usual or was busier with kids.

- What do you find frustrating about your current tracking method, or if you don't track your condition, why?

I don't have a particular tracking method, I just try to identify flare up triggers after the fact.

- What kind of data would you like to log? (e.g., stress, symptoms, meds, sleep, mood, diet, menstrual cycle, illness, exercise)

Stress is huge for me, symptoms, sleep, diet, and menstrual cycle

- How do you feel about getting reminders to track data?

It could be helpful but I don't want to be bothered with several notifications in a day and would like the ability to turn them off.

- How do you feel about tracking your Hashimoto Disease? (Anxious, motivated, frustrated, empowered, overwhelmed, etc.)

Motivated to do it, but also overwhelmed. I haven't been great about tracking because I stay busy and haven't found an easy, quick way to track.

- What would help you feel more supported or less isolated?

Maybe a feature for community support, like online discussion ` groups

- What, if anything, would make it easy to use the app every day?

Quick entry. Not having to type long sentences, preferably just button clicks or check boxes.

- What would deter you from using the app?

Feeling overwhelmed by having to think too much or spend too much time entering information. Not having too many things to look at.

- How comfortable do you feel storing your health data in an app like this?

As long as my information isn't shared without my permission and is stored on my phone, I'm fine with sharing my information.

- If you could tell the person designing this app one thing to make it truly helpful for people with Hashimoto's, what would you say?

Brain fog and mood swings are a struggle. I don't want to have to think too hard.